Two explanations have been given the meaning of the present apathy in the country. The one is that it is due upon the Land question, but rather upon the Education question, the Licenses and the general merits and the Ministry. The other is an appeal to ascertain whether way with fraud or force, and being dependent upon the aid of lawyers or land agents.

Of the candidates who were members of the late Assembly, and have thus far addressed the constituents, a few have endeavored to explain or justify their votes for the second reading of the Land Bill. But even of those there are hardly any who venture to say that the bill has their approval as well as their votes. They have shown, like the Premier himself, that their faith is in principle to the principles of the bill are diametrically opposed. Their defence of their votes, and of their own consistency, is found in a more or less vague suggestion that they voted for the second reading of the bill with a view to its character being radically changed in committee, and in an intimation that, if this had not been done, they would, on the third reading, have thrown it out. It is for the electors to consider which is the safer course—to judge these gentlemen according to what they have said, or to accept their statements as to what they would have done on the second reading of a doubtful contingency. These gentlemen are really in a somewhat worse position than that of the new men who come forward with a cheerful simplicity, and say in effect, "We will support any proposal that would settle the land question to the satisfaction of all parties." The latter might possibly by some chance be found voting on the side of a happy principle; but the others stand convicted of having voted on the side of the unadvised, under circumstances which, according to Parliamentary usage, gave their votes the effect of a declaration that these unadvised principles were to have the formal adoption and approval of Parliament. These votes were votes against radical change in the law, given, as it is said, with the desire that radical changes might be made. But, in the absence of a clear prospect or definite hope of such changes being made, the second reading of the bill could only be regarded as preliminary to its rejection at a later stage, after time had been consumed and public business had been brought into a position of great embarrassment. Radical changes in the bill—such changes as some of those gentlemen who voted for it now appear disposed to approve—could only have been made with the consent of the Ministry. Had they been carried over the heads of the Ministry, the Ministry would have suffered as critical a defeat as it did in the loss of the second reading, and would have had to drop the bill and consider its own position. It has been said that after the late defeat a vote of confidence was offered. A vote of confidence would have been as necessary in the other case to re-establish the Ministry after the settlement of the land policy had been taken out of its hands. Would Sir JOHN ROBERTSON have been willing to go on in 1880 if the 13th clause and its appendages had been struck out of his Land Bill? By introducing the consolidating bill of last session, he and his colleagues behind him have emphatically declared that the situation is now the same as it was then; and he and they were as clearly bound to fight for the principles they proposed to re-affirm as they were when the Alienation Act was introduced. Those gentlemen who desire substantial reform in the land law, and voted the other day for a bill which was a carefully constructed barrier against substantial reform, apparently persuaded themselves, and are trying to persuade the public, that as they did all the Government wanted, the Government would in return have done all that they wanted. But such assumptions were purely imaginary. Mr. GARRARD, for instance, explains that he relied upon Sir JOHN ROBERTSON's admission that there were men in the House, like Mr. FENNEL and Mr. GARRARD, who were able to deal with the question, and upon his assurance that "he would be glad to receive amendments, so that the country might be benefited by a more perfect measure." But what did Sir JOHN ROBERTSON actually say? He said that, in considering the provisions of the bill, he had thought very little about the bill, but he had added: "I think I shall show what has been left out; I am quite sure that the members, prominently the hon. member for Camden (Mr. GARRARD), the hon. member for St. Leonards, and other gentlemen well acquainted with the working of the Land Law, will be able to detect any omissions which I may not have detected, but if we are unable to give the country the advantage of their knowledge." This shows that what Sir JOHN was prepared to accept was the making good of omissions. He was prepared to have the new bill improved by additions, but clearly on the understanding that they were in harmony with the old law. There was nothing whatever here to warrant the supposition that the Government would consent to any substantial amendment in principle. Sir JOHN ROBERTSON, in fact, expressly declared that in question relating to the holding of land it was undesirable to do any fundamental change. The whole tenor of his speech discouraged the supposition upon which those members who voted for the bill intended to amend it relied. The bill itself, unlike the amending bills of 1876 and 1880, was in substance and in spirit a challenge to the opponents of indiscriminate selection before survey on leased land to do their worst. It was a distinct declaration by the Government that this policy, which had lasted for twenty-one years, should be fixed more firmly than ever in the law; and in making that declaration those who voted for the second reading took part. Their explanation of their action will not satisfy anybody, because it is either an afterthought, or evidence that they are unacquainted with the elementary principles of responsible government. They treated the bill (upon their own theory) as if it had dropped from the clouds, had no reputation, and could be cut and carved by everybody without anybody suffering from the operation. But there is not our own recognized system of legislation; and men who act as though it was can hardly be efficient, trustworthy, or desirable members of Parliament.

The introduction into the election of the side issues on which we have commented, may have consequences which the Ministry has not foreseen. Certain electors have professed to be afraid that the Education Act is endangered, and that the recently passed Liquor Licensing Law will be tampered with, through the election of members opposed to the present Government. Therefore these questions have been brought to the front, and those who regard them as all-important have been asked to uphold the Government because it is supposed they are safe only while it is in power. The first place this is a most grotesque assumption. It is quite possible that there are ornaments of the Government who do not approve of the Education Act or the Liquor Licensing Act. But it is also quite certain that there will be successful opponents of the Government who do approve of these measures. As to those who may dislike the existing legislation on the Education and Liquor Licensing questions, it is but a reasonable inference that if the election be confined to the issue on which the House was dissolved, they will not attempt to interfere with laws which are the fruit of much public deliberation. We venture to think that a majority of such members, knowing the issue on which they won their Parliamentary position, would not deal with such legislation. A sense of fairness would suggest that laws of such recent enactment as those in question should have a fair trial. Our Parliaments only last three years, and it must be a very bad law indeed much worse than either the Public Schools Act or the Liquor Licensing Act that will require serious alteration in three years. But if the proposed friends of these measures bring them up for discussion at this election, and they are made part of the case concerned by the contest, will not the new House have some cause to consider itself entitled to legislate on them as well as on the Land Bill? Though these side issues have been introduced by the Government and its friends, and have been discussed, they have not determined the election so far. Their introduction has been resented by the constituents; they have not availed to return the Government or its supporters; and what has been done has given a handle, it may be, to opponents of the Education Act and the Liquor Licensing Law to seek to effect a change, which, if the issue of the election had been confined to the Land Bill, they would have had no reason to attempt.

The recently established aboriginal protectorate does not seem to have led to any particularly beneficial results. A correspondent from the interior informs us that some days ago that the blacks at the mission stations were in a very much worse condition than before the appointment of a protector, and for the reason that the old station supplies have been stopped, while nothing has been done towards rendering the stations necessary by the provision of other means of relief. Prior to the establishment of the protectorate it had been the custom to supplement the private subscriptions to the stations in the ratio of £2 from the public revenue to every £1 collected. This custom, it seems, has been interrupted, with results that may easily be imagined. The managers of some of the stations are in a state of utter destitution; many of the inmates have been turned adrift for want of rations; there is danger that unless relief is very speedily afforded the stations may have to be abandoned, and thus all the results of their labour and of the public money they have expended will be lost to the public and the aborigines. The new protector is reported to hold views unfavourable to these mission stations, or indeed to any system which gathers the blacks into communities, but while the stations exist they have a certain claim to just treatment. Their present place is that they have been unjustly treated, and to represent this view a deputation, representing the New South Wales Aborigines Protection Association, waited upon the Premier on Friday last. They handed in the audited accounts of the Malaga mission, which they argue represent a justly incurred expenditure. They claim that the Government, by virtue of its promises, is indebted to the mission in a sum of at least £2000. So large an amount may probably astonish those unfamiliar with the finances of the mission or the desperate plight to which, through long waiting, the inmates are reduced. It will be well for the Government to at once examine the claim, or at all events to grant some immediate relief. Other and better projects may be in course of preparation, but the public attention is called to an urgent want that has already waited too long. The stations may have had their funds largely run out, and so supply to justify their being starved out of existence.

NEWS OF THE DAY.

The Archbishop of Canterbury, the Most Rev. Archibald Campbell Tait, D.D., Primate of all England, died on Sunday morning, in his 72nd year. In another part of the Herald we publish a biographical sketch of the deceased.

The trial of Arabi, if it can be called, is over. Prisoner pleaded guilty to the charge of rebellion, and was sentenced to death, whereupon the Khedive commuted the sentence to one of exile for life. It is expected that some English possession will be chosen as the place of his exile. It is returned to Egypt without permission, he is to be once again executed. It is said that the European residents in Egypt are indignant at what they consider a farce of a trial; but the native population is jubilant, whilst the English press eulogizes the Earl of Dufferin's tact in bringing the matter to a close. The Khedive has granted an amnesty to the minor offenders.

Mr. GREY is of opinion that the construction of the Channel tunnel would involve the happiest results to both England and France. He told a deputation that, added that the decision of the question as to the propriety of constructing the tunnel rested with England.

The United States Congress is to meet next Monday. "President" is expected to refer to the tariff, the army and navy, and for giving the Civil Service a more stable tenure.

At a meeting of the Executive Council, held yesterday morning, the case of James McCarthy, convicted at the recent Dubbo assizes, before his Honor Sir William Manning, for the offence of Andrew Urquhart, was discussed. It was decided to commute the sentence to hard labour for life, the first three years in iron.

Mr. UNDERLAND that a proclamation was issued by the Executive Council yesterday morning, proroguing the meeting of the Legislative Council until Wednesday, January 8.

LECTIONS in nine of the electoral districts of the colony took place yesterday, and resulted in the return of the following gentlemen:—For Districts, Messrs. Wright, Freeman, and Sutherland; for Albany, Mr. George Day; for Brindwood, Mr. Alexander Irvine; for the Hunter, Mr. J. F. Barnes; for Queanbeyan, Mr. G. F. de Salis; for Young, Messrs. Gerald Spring and J. A. Mackinnon; for East Macquarie, Messrs. E. Bruker, for Tenterfield, Sir Henry Parkes.

It will be seen by our telegraphic election news that Sir Henry Parkes has been elected unopposed for the electorate of Tenterfield. Sir Henry has therefore withdrawn from his candidature for St. Leonards, and has inserted a notice to that effect in our advertising columns. He wrote a graceful letter to his constituents at St. Leonards, thanking them for their exertions on his behalf, and stating that he should be glad to be of service to them in his future public course.

The Hon. James Watson, Colonial Treasurer, was defeated yesterday for his old constituency, Young. It is said that Mr. John Deane, contesting the seat for Kiama, was elected by a majority of 100 votes.

stephan's Church, Phillip-street, there being present a number of ministers and laymen. The chair was occupied by the Moderator, the Rev. J. Cooh. Dr. Steel read a paper on the subject of "Periodical Written Examinations." Mr. Sinclair, superintendent of St. Leonard's Sunday School, conducted the examination, and the subject of teaching and examination was discussed. A report will appear in a future issue.

A PECULIAR discovery of old silver has been made on the estate of Mr. John Rie, the valley near Springwood on the Blue Mountains. A pig rooting in a paddock near the homestead brought some old coins to view, and by a very brief search about the spot a dozen were found, the oldest being dated 1838. There are among them Spanish dollars, bearing the heads of Carlos and Ferdinand; also some of those rare old coins known in early colonial days as the "holly dollar," from which the dumpy were cut; a five-shilling dollar of the Bank of England, and four shilling dollars, dated 1820; also, two Indian coins in an excellent state of preservation. The collection is singular as the manner of its discovery, and may induce residents of the mountains to set a new value upon their pigs. It is impossible to guess as to when or by whom the treasure was deposited, but being found near to an old Government road, was probably the hidden wealth of some old Government hand, who planted it for safe keeping, and was by stress of circumstances prevented from unearthing it at a future time. The dates on the shillings would seem to indicate that it had remained buried for about 50 years.

One of the mostest of the many and varied advertising publications issued by the land auctioneers during the past few months has just been brought out by Messrs. Pitt, Rodd, and Purves, in connection with a forthcoming sale at Port Phillip. It is a book containing in a very tasteful wrapper. It is rendered especially attractive by two well-executed colored lithographs of harbour views—one taken from Point Piper, the other from Bellevue Hill. Messrs. Gibbs, Shillard, and Co. are the printers, and the appearance of the production does them credit.

The first case in connection with the present elections was yesterday brought before the Central Police Court, a man being charged with having at the booth in Balmore Park, a polling place for the election of candidates to represent the constituency of South Sydney in Parliament, attempted to vote a second time. The man pleaded that he had been intoxicated. The case was remanded.

FIVE LADS, the eldest of whom was about 15 years of age, the youngest being 11 years, were yesterday brought before Mr. CRANE, S.M., in the Central Police Court on a charge of having stolen 60 bags, to which charge they pleaded guilty, and were imprisoned for a couple of three hours in order that in the interim they could be charged under the Industrial Schools Act. Being brought upon a charge under that Act, they were committed to the reformatory. In connection with this case, another of having received the bags knowing them to be stolen was brought against the person who had purchased them, and, being partly heard, was also remanded. The history of the five lads disclosed a state of affairs little dreamt of by those who associate innocence and all the virtues with childhood, and whose idea of a child is confined to the dainty little men and women of the juvenile ball or picnic. One of the lads told his tale somewhat after the following manner:—"Me and this 'ere crew (a child of about 13 years of age) was at the theatre, when we came out we met another crew as tall as us, and they were round with us, and we climbed up a wall and crept into Melrose's through a place where a board was broke. There was five of us creeps and three girls 'bout same age as we was. The girls told us where the bags was and how we could get 'em. We slept there all night, boys and girls. We were explaining that 'Melrose's' is an out-house on the floor of which a little old straw is thrown. 'Next morning us and the girls went round, and took the bags. Three of us creeps sold 'em—two lots for 5s. each, and one for 6s. We give the girls some of the money. We spent ours in beer, and then we came to the police station. One of the girls got two months for shaking £2. The girls split up on us, and that's how the 'de got on. I shook £5 from my father. 'Spos if I have to go on the Vernon I come to go."

THE City Coroner yesterday concluded an inquest with respect to the death of Frank Bell, a quartermaster attached to the 4th Australian, who on Friday morning last was drowned in the harbour while attempting to swim between the wharves and the ferry boat St. Leonard's, plying between North Shore and Circular Quay. The jury brought in a verdict of manslaughter against Thomas Richards, master of the St. Leonard's, and two survivors of £100 each, to appear at the next sitting of the Criminal Court.

SEVERAL accidents in connection with vehicles occurred yesterday. A collision occurred between a van and a gentleman on horseback, at the corner of Phillip and King streets, injuring the latter and his horse considerably. A man named Nicholas Woodcock, a labourer, residing at 5, Hart-street, was taken to hospital after being injured by a collision with a horse and cart, at Circular Quay, about 8 p.m. A horse bolted from Oxford-street with an empty buggy, and after a collision with a "bus" ran into a buggy driven by Dr. Sedgewick, of Newtown, doing a good deal of damage to both vehicles. After some trouble he was stopped. The buggy was the property of Mr. Fennelly, of the Castlereagh-street Horse Bazaar, and had been hired by him to a customer earlier in the afternoon. Michael Cahill, a labourer, residing at 98, Surry-street, Darlinghurst, was thrown from a cart at Ultimo, dislocating his hip. He was taken to the hospital, and the dislocating was reduced, and he was home again. A horse attached to a cart in Farmans-street ran away; both wheels came off, and one of them struck a woman named Martha Dillon, knocking her down and passing over her arm. She was taken to the hospital, where it was found that her left arm had been fractured and her shoulder injured.

TWO sudden deaths were reported by the police yesterday—the first that of Charlotte Hyde, who died at her residence, 10, Albert-street, at 11 o'clock, and the other that of Philip Dent, of Chapel-lane, Woolloomooloo, who was seized with a fit while passing down the lane, and died almost immediately. Inquests have been held in both cases.

A FATAL accident occurred at Messrs. Harris and Ackman's establishment, Pitt-street, yesterday afternoon. Thomas Clements, a warehouseman, aged 38, was hanging over a goods cart, weighing about 200 lbs., when his foot slipped, and the cart came hurtling down, the end catching him on the forehead and knocking him to the ground. He was picked up insensible and taken to the hospital, where he died about an hour after admission. On examination, it was found that his skull had been fractured.

JOHN FREDERICK JONES, who was admitted to the hospital on Saturday, suffering from injuries received by a fall from his horse near Hyde, died about 8 o'clock yesterday morning.

A LITTLE boy named George Smith, nine years of age, attending the Hay-street Ragged School, Gloucester-street, died yesterday morning. He was climbing upon one of the Corporation dust carts for the purpose of taking out a piece of wood, when his leg got caught in the wheel, and he was whirled round and thrown to the ground, fracturing his left thigh. He was removed to the hospital and admitted.

THE following is the report of the Prince Alfred Hospital for the week ending December 1, 1882:—Number of in-patients at last report, 54 males, 22 females; since admission, 6 males, 6 females; discharged, 4 males, 4 females; died, 1 male; remaining in hospital on December 1, 1882, 53 males, 24 females; total, 77.

THE following is the report of the Sydney Hospital for the same period:—Number of in-patients at last report, 6 females; total, 50; discharged, 30 males, 14 females; total, 60; died, 7 males, 1 female; total, 8; remaining, 151 males, 61 females; total, 212.

IT will be noticed by reference to an advertisement in another column that a subscription has been commenced in aid of the widows and orphans of the officers and crew of the General Sessions today having been held at the Sydney Hospital, which commenced in October.

An amusing episode occurred in the report in yesterday's Herald of the declaration of the poll at South Sydney. The "free-faced and blaggy but enthusiastic politician" who had been the crowd were mischievous, not politicians.

THE past and present members of the United University of Oxford and Cambridge, resident in the colony, to the number of about 50, entertained the Hon. Ivo Bligh and the amateur members of his team, nearly all of whom are members of either Oxford or Cambridge, at a dinner at the Sydney Hotel, on Saturday evening.

THE quarterly public meeting in connection with the Presbyterian Church of New South Wales Sabbath-school Association was held last evening, in St.

THE AMERICAN CONGRESS.

LONDON, Dec. 4.

The United States Congress meets on Monday next. It is anticipated that the President's message will set forth the need which exists for a revision of the tariff, recommend an increase in the strength of the Army and Navy, and support the theory that as a matter of public policy Civil servants should enjoy a stable tenure of office contingent upon good behaviour, instead of being liable as at present to dismissal upon each succeeding change of administration.

LONDON, Dec. 4.

ARABI'S SENTENCE OF EXILE.

LONDON, Dec. 4.

Arabi, under the circumstances of his sentence of exile, exhibits a calm dignity. The Europeans in Egypt are indignant at the farcical nature of Arabi's trial, while the natives rejoice at the clemency which has been extended to him and the other offenders. The English press is nearly unanimous in endorsing the Earl of Dufferin's tact in interposing between the Native Government and the chief offender.

FRANCE AND THE CHANNEL TUNNEL.

LONDON, Dec. 4.

ARABI'S TRIAL.

LONDON, Dec. 3 (EVENING).

Arabi's trial, which commenced this morning, was, as anticipated, of very short duration. The prisoner was condemned to death; whereupon, immediately the verdict was read, the Khedive, exercising clemency, commuted his (Arabi's) sentence to exile from Egypt. When asked by the Court to state whether he was guilty or not guilty, Arabi pleaded guilty to rebellion. The commutation of the sentence by the Khedive is only conditional upon his remaining out of the country. If he returns without permission he will be executed forthwith. It is generally believed that some of the English possessions will be selected as Arabi's place of banishment.

THE TURKISH MINISTRY.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Dec. 3.

The changes reported in the personnel of the Turkish Ministry have not proved of a permanent character. VICTORIA.

MELBOURNE, MONDAY.

Mr. COPPIN was presented to-day with a cheque for £400, subscribed by some of his supporters in the recent contest for the Melbourne Province, to defray his election expenses. In a speech, in which he expressed his appreciation of the support he received under such adverse circumstances would encourage him to come forward on another occasion. Mr. COPPIN stated in reply that, had he not been the victim of a scare, originated by one of his opponents for the purpose of depreciating his chances of election, he would have been returned. He deplored the prejudicial influence of religion and sectarianism during the election, and referred to the reputation of a promise that he should receive the support of the Constitutional party for the first available seat, in consideration of his retiring from the election for East Melbourne. In conclusion, he promised to place his services at the disposal of the electors whenever he was called upon.

At a dinner given by the Mayor of Collingwood to welcome Mr. Henry Walker, who was four times Mayor of the municipality, on his return to the colony, Sir Julius Vogel declared his opinion that the present talk about federation of the colonies was a great piece of humbug. Both Sir Julius Vogel and Mr. McKean, M.L.A., referring indirectly to the railway collision, strongly advocated the appointment of a board to manage the railways.

The journeymen coachmakers have formed a union, and are resolved to enforce the eight hours' system in the trade. Hitherto they have worked for 10 hours. BRISBANE, MONDAY.

The latter then fired three shots at Brennan, one of which entered his thigh, the bullet being subsequently extracted. The woman has been arrested as an accessory.

The Full Court had reversed the decision. To-day, in addition to arguing that Nevill was insane when he committed suicide, Mr. H. T.
